

Eeshu Singh

ENGL 393

Dr. Christopher Justice

19 February, 2024

My Writing Process

My writing process is pretty straightforward. I think while I write. I don't normally plan out how I am going to write about a topic. Generally I start out with an intro about the topic and list out what comes off the top of my head. If what I am writing about is something personal I am fairly straightforward in writing what I experienced. Something that happens often to me is that I hit blocks. I have trouble articulating my thoughts and feelings in person and on paper. It is something that I have struggled with in the past and continue to struggle with to this day. Sometimes when I am in the middle of writing I'll often stop completely and start doing something completely unrelated. Maybe that might be watching a random video or reading a comic for a short period of time. I then hop right back into writing and continue where I left off. I Just follow wherever my thoughts take me when I come up with something I find worthy of writing.

Whenever I do come up with ideas to write about, I often read back and rearrange my thoughts and refine my writing. My initial drafts in writing are often somewhat out of order and then I go back through it and rearrange it and add what I think I need to afterwards. I don't usually worry too much about what I am writing at the moment. I just get as many thoughts and ideas as I can out on the paper. This process however takes a lot of time because of the difficulty I have with articulating my thoughts in the format of a paper.

Overall I believe my writing process is very messy and all over the place. It usually doesn't have a specific order. My writing process is more of me just writing whatever I can possibly think of out onto the paper, then revising what I wrote so that the paper looks like it has some structure to it and it flows properly.